

75 Questions to Start a Conversation

Coming up with ways to connect and have a conversation with people can be difficult at times. Especially with more people being face down in their phones. Do you remember how you use to start a conversation when you were a kid? You were on the playground at school or riding your bike in the neighborhood and you saw a person that you wanted to connect with. You first introduced yourself and asked a simple question. Hey, my name is... You want to play or cool bike where did you get it?

Guess what? It still works today with big kids; I mean adults. I have listed a number of different questions you can ask to start a conversation and get to know someone so you can grow your network. When you begin a discussion with someone, you want it to be interesting, insightful, and entertaining, and that means saying something or asking a question more than, "So, this is some nice weather, huh?"

Of course, what you say to someone depends on the environment. You're not going to say the same thing to a new coworker that you would to your best friend. Below are a set of conversation starters that you can use whether you've met someone for the first time, or you want to spark a deeper talk. The questions have been organized based on specific situations, including any situation, meeting for the first time, deeper conversations, networking events, and engaging friends.
